The eyes have it

HERE'S LOOKING AT YOU

With thousands of dollars worth of highly technical equipment on hand, optometrist Alan Levine checked a patient's vision by simply moving a pencil in front of her eyes.

While assessing the woman's peripheral vision, Levine had inadvertently demonstrated the partnership between old and new techniques in optometry.

The technical gadgetry used by Levine and other optometrists at the Upland office of Dr. Irwin Mintz, 553 N. Mountain Ave., is complemented by the traditional methods, such as the watch-the-pencil technique.

High-powered biomicroscopes and retinal cameras serve as checks and balances for the older methods of examination, including the seemingly timeless eye charts.

Sitting within a circle of machinery, Dr. Mintz pressed a button and the various instruments revolved around him. He stopped at a computerized vision-tester.

"These types of equipment allow us to do more testing in less time, thus it gives us more time to explain things to the patient," said Mintz.

However, he added the gadgets alleviate the drab routines that develop after years spent doing the same job the same way.

"Most of the time, optometrists like myself have spent a lot of time spinning wheels and dials," he said, referring to the traditional instruments that determine the lenses needed for eyeglasses. The different lenses are mounted on a wheel and spun in front of the patient's eyes by moving a dial.

With the rising popularity of gadgets and gizmos, Mintz is like a kid in a computer store.

Most of the doctor's equipment is valued "in the five-figure range," with one machine

There are computers that test for color blindness and others that produce maps of the patient's cornea — a transparent covering for the lense of the eye. The diagrams are essential in deciding the shape of contact lenses, said Mintz.

There are machines that test for glaucoma by measuring pressure within the eye. Glaucoma, a hardening of the eyeball, can lead to partial or total blindness.

And there is a retinal camera that takes Polaroid snapshots of the back of the eye, showing the optic nerve and blood vessels.

Mintz said these photographs can be quite convincing for patients reluctant to undergo treatment. Some snapshots show dark discoloration of the eyeball, with the main nerve appearing infected.

In one case, the nerve was damaged by an infection that traveled through the bloodstream from a bad tooth.

Mintz's latest piece of optical equipment is the "ivex subjective refractometer," a long name for an instrument that helps determine the strength of eyeglasses needed by the patient.

The same test has long been done by simply shining a small flashlight into the eye and measuring how well the light reflects back.

Mintz said both methods are now used, one checking the other.

"It takes time to learn to operate all the equipment," he said. "But this is where the future is going."

The doctor's apparent penchant for technology is not limited to optometry. He has just installed a sonar burglar alarm, referred to as an "anti-burglary device," to protect all his expensive equipment.

Additionally, Mintz installed a paging system that helps him keep track of his employees. Workers are assigned various colors on a light panel within Mintz's office. The lights are activated whenever an employee is in a specific room.

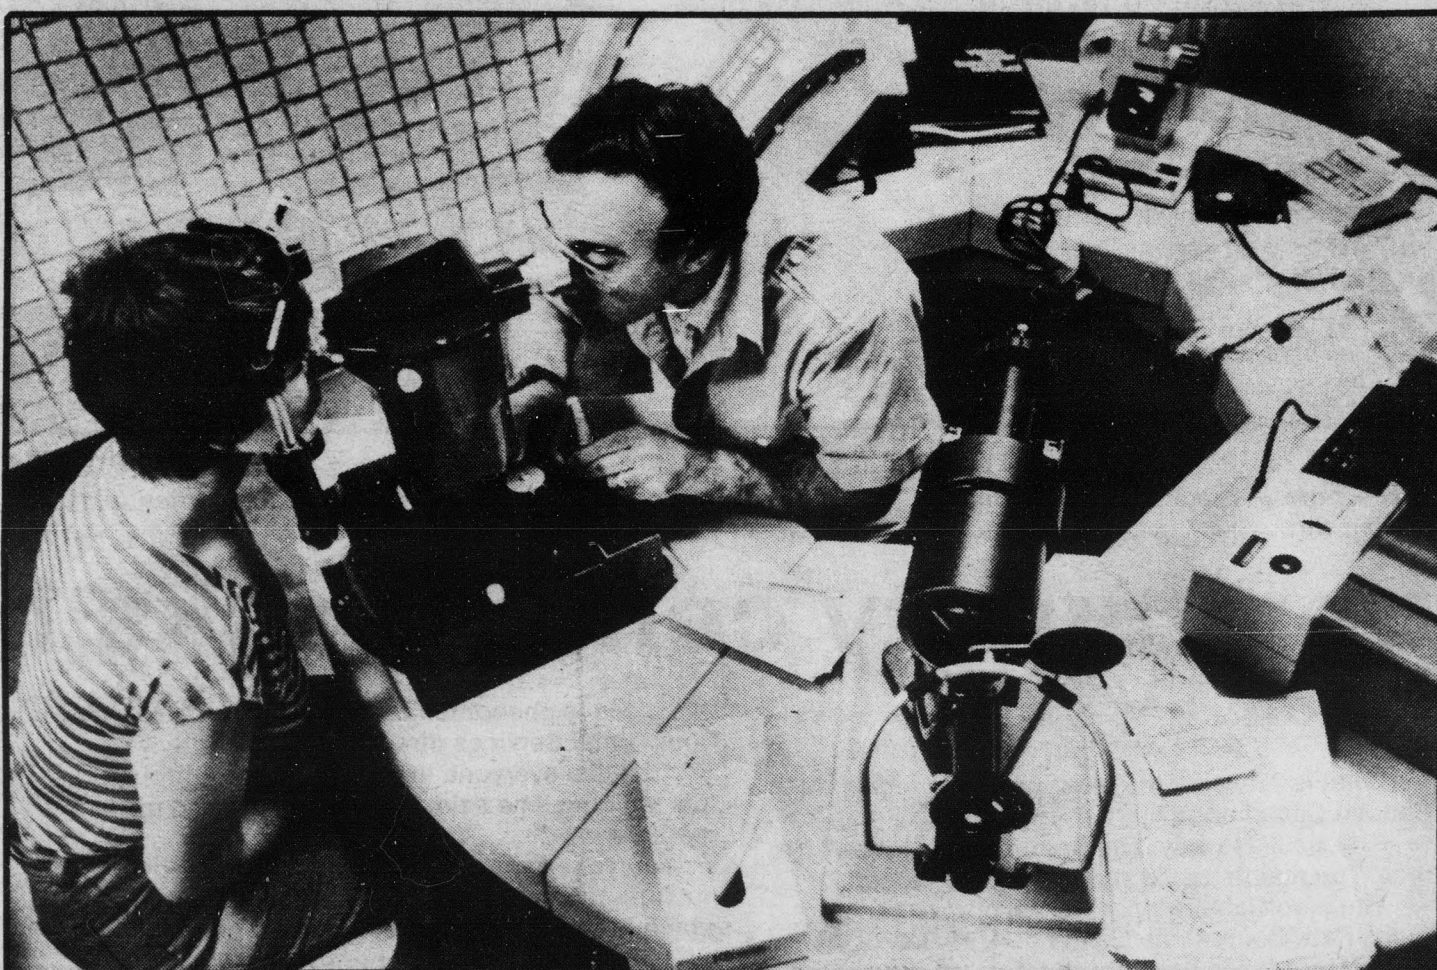

"You can go crazy in this place walking in circles trying to find somebody," he said with a laugh. □

Upland center helps teachers

By Ian Fallis

Even the best teacher can learn something at Upland Elementary School.

The school is the home of Upland School District's Professional Development Center.

The center is 10 years old, and last year was incorporated into a statewide network with the dual purpose of training teachers on computers and instructing teachers in the most modern instructional theory and help them apply theory to the classroom.

The Upland center concentrates on teacher instruction. It also instructs administrators, such as principals, in how to help the teachers.

"We combine the science of teaching — the research — with the art of teaching, ... (in which teachers) use their creativity to provide an exciting program for the kids," said Loren Sanchez.

Sanchez, the district's assistant superintendent for instruction, oversees the center.

Improving the quality of education, including improving teachers, has apparently become a popular issue in California.

And the recent school funding bill, SB 813,

Community center packs in the people

By Matt Coker

What is probably the most-used city facility in Rancho Cucamonga?

City Hall? No way. The Sheriff's substation? No dice. The maintenance yard? Not even close.

The (unofficial) winner would most likely be Lions Park Community Center at 9161 Base Line Road. More faces have passed through the center than a Hollywood plastic surgeon's office.

In fact, the staff counts the number of people who utilize Lions Park each day. From Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, more than 63,000 people had crossed through the center's double glass doors.

The center's director, Kevin Evans, predicts 70,000 visitors will have utilized Lions Park's five multi-purpose rooms by year's end. That is 10,000 more people than the city's current population.

"I can't imagine that many people walking through and using the services," Evans said. "It shows a lot of community support just by the numbers."

"The number of people who have gone through this place is phenomenal," Bill Holley, the city's Community Services director, said recently.

"It's like everyone in the city comes through this building," he said. "We're still turning many groups away."

Everyone from Toastmasters to toe-tappers meet regularly at the 8,500 square-foot center, which is one of only two community buildings in the city. The other is the Neighborhood Center on Arrow Highway.

A 2,000 square-foot cynderblock building was constructed as a meeting hall by the Cucamonga Lions Club in 1964. Later, the club donated the hall to the county and it was used as a library.

The Lions Club acquired additional surrounding land for the county and, in 1975, built the adjacent library and began adding on to the meeting hall.

After four additional rooms were in place, the meeting hall, now known as Lions Hall, became the most used building around as dance, exercise and self-defense classes were held there.

"A person who doesn't know the history of the building would never know the old building is still there," Holley said.

Part of the Lions Club land acquisition included the land which is now a park. When the city incorporated in 1977 the center and the park were turned over to the city, but the adjacent library remained part of the county system.

The Lions Club made sure the land's deed included a provision that the buildings and park be used as a community center, Holley said.

"It is protected in perpetuity for the use of community recreation," Holley said.

Oddly enough, Evans is now the president of the Cucamonga District Lions Club, whose executive board meets at Lions Park.

The center offers a wide variety of uses. Everything from Clownology classes to city council meetings are staged there.

While the city's planning commission meets to

A variety of classes are offered at Lions Park Center during each session. Floyd Burk instructs two students in the art of self defense, another class at Lions Park. Registration for the next session will be held in January.

Books can satisfy JFK curiosity

"A 1979 Gallup poll inquired: 'Of all the presidents we have ever had, who do you wish were president today?' A majority chose John F. Kennedy.

Similar results were obtained in 1980. When respondents were also asked to give reasons for their choice, the three most frequently mentioned were 'handled government, domestic problems' (30 percent), 'strong, decisive' (17 percent) and 'leadership' (9 percent)."

The 35th President of the United States, John F. Kennedy, has remained a striking figure in our nation's past. The 20th anniversary of his assassination is being commemorated by an unprecedented amount of media attention. This seems like an appropriate time to look at some of the books available at the Upland Public Library on the President and his family.

Some of the new books being released to coincide with his death include: "A Hero For Our Time" by Ralph Martin, which has already reached the best seller list. It focuses on Kennedy the man rather than Kennedy the president, and probes into his private life before, as well as during, the presidency. "One Brief Shining Moment" by William Manchester is a lavishly illustrated recollection of JFK and his family by a friend and colleague of 2 decades. The book "provides us with a myriad of anecdotes and insights into a life that bristled with vigor, competitiveness and an unflagging drive for excellence..."

"Kennedy: The New Generation" by Frank Teti is a photographic chronicle of the nearly 30 offspring of the Kennedy clan. This book was developed with the cooperation of the family and includes many pictures from their personal collection.

"Kathleen Kennedy: Her Life and Times" by Lynne McTaggart examines the short life of one of JFK's younger sisters. The book tells of her 1938 debut in London, her marriage to the future Duke of Devonshire, and (after his death) her romance with Earl Fitzwilliam. He and Kathleen were killed in the crash of a small plane in 1948, and until now that romance has been a carefully guarded Kennedy secret.

A look at our subject catalog proves the fascination with the president isn't only a recent phenomenon. A few of the more outstanding books from the past include:

"The Best and The Brightest" by David Halberstam, which was a best seller in 1972. This book investigates the Kennedy-Johnson team and their early decision-making on Vietnam. According to this study, the team he assembled as advisors, "the best and the brightest" turned out to be the architects of the disastrous foreign policy. "Johnny, We Hardly Knew Ya" by Kenneth O'Donnell and David Powers is a personal and affectionate look at Kennedy by two of his closest companions. O'Donnell and Powers, who were known to the White House Press Corps as the "Irish mafia," were quite candid in their memoirs.

Kennedy, himself, won a Pulitzer Prize in 1957 for the book, "Profiles In Courage." He wrote this book of biographical studies of American political heroes while recovering from an operation necessitated by injuries he received during World War II (the book, "PT 109" by Robert Donovan recreates this incident).

Perhaps the greatest fascination is still with the assassination itself and the speculation of a conspiracy. A wide range of books are available portraying a variety of theories. Some of the more interesting include:

"Best Evidence" by David Lifton, which presents evidence of 3 separate conspiracies: murdering the president, altering the corpse, and obscuring the information. This book re-evaluates autopsy data published in the Warren Reports and looks at newer forensic material uncovered by the House Select Committee on Assassinations.

"Conspiracy" by Anthony Summers is an exciting and readable look at questions surrounding the assassination. Summers argues that Oswald may have been a tool of a renegade element of U.S. intelligence.

"Crime of the Century" by Michael Kurtz analyzes the investigations of the Warren Commission and the House Select Committee, outlines the major areas of controversy and concludes that both investigations failed to recognize considerable evidence of an assassination conspiracy.

"The Tears of Autumn" by Charles McCarry is a fictionalized speculation into the real motives for Kennedy's murder. In this thriller, Kennedy's assassination is engineered as revenge by the relatives of Ngo Dinh Diem, who was himself assassinated in a Vietnamese coup in 1963.

The nation was plunged into an almost unprecedented period of mourning following the assassination. Tributes to the murdered president were many. "Four Days" by UPI (United Press International) and American Heritage Magazine is a re-examination of those four harrowing days which began Nov. 22, 1963. "That Day With God," edited by William M. Fine, gathers together from the three major religions the most moving and significant expressions of our nation's shock and grief.

This is just a very brief look at some of the available material on JFK and the Kennedy family. All of the titles mentioned can be found at the library.

This Thanksgiving had too much turkey

By Samuel J. Tolmasoff

The Thanksgiving Day that stands out in my memories was in the year 1926. It started out as a normal day. My friend Solly stopped by my house and we went down to the "Flats" where we picked up Joe Gonzales. We caught the "P" car line on First Street and headed for downtown Los Angeles.

We were headed for Solomen's Penny Dance on South Grand Avenue, where every Thanksgiving Day Mr. Solomen would throw a big Thanksgiving Day Feast for the newsboys of Los Angeles. We were newsboys and didn't need a formal invitation.

The streetcar took us within a couple of blocks of the dance hall and when we arrived there were already several hundred boys gathered on the street in front of the dance hall. Traffic was blocked off by the police. Newspaper reporters and photographers were there in number, as this was a traditional, yearly Los Angeles event.

Soon Mr. Solomen came out, with several helpers lugging several large bags. As the yelling and cheering died down, Mr. Solomen proceeded to grab down into the bags, bringing up handfuls of pennies that he threw over the newsboys. There was a mad scramble for the pennies. If you were lucky you might come up with a half dozen shiny copper coins, but they were gold coins as far as their prestige value was concerned.

By noon we were in the dance hall seated at very long tables and scores of waiters brought out the turkey and trimmings.

I stuffed my dinner down hurriedly as I had a date at one at the Pecan Street Playground.

I was a member of the playground harmonica band. We had won the city championship that year and were quite a sensation. We had appeared as one of the best vaudeville acts of the year at the Shrine Auditorium. We were called on at least once a week to appear at some function or other.

We were taken to a stately old mansion at the west side of town with a long curving driveway and beautifully landscaped grounds. We were escorted into a large room where other groups of entertainers were gathered. One of them, I'm fairly sure, was a newly-formed group known as the "Sons of the Pioneers."

After we had performed, we were taken to a large dining hall. It seemed like everybody that was anybody in Los Angeles was there. After 50-some-odd years memory has a tendency to fade, but I do remember John C. Porter, the mayor of Los Angeles at that time.

He sat next to me at the lavish dinner and he was quite amazed at my ability to put away the food, like the cranberry sauce — especially as there was no one around to boss me.

Suddenly, in the middle of the dinner, I wasn't hungry anymore. For the first time in my life I refused a dish of ice cream.

The gracious hostess, before we left, gave each of us an envelope containing a $10 bill, even though we weren't supposed to be paid.

When I finally got home late that afternoon, I found the family waiting for me.

Mother said: "We've been holding up the turkey Thanksgiving dinner till you got home. Go wash up and get to the table for dinner."

determine how brick walls should go up, youngsters in a nearby karate class are learning how to knock brick walls down.

Holley said the weirdest class he ever heard being considered at Lions Park was "Meat and Home Decorating."

"The class title is somewhat strange," he said. "Actually, the class was about basic things you could do to better your home like learning to cook nifty things, decorating tips — a fun type course.

But it sure took you back when you first heard the title."

Evans said a model rocketry class was the oddest idea he can remember.

"I could see problems with that," Evans said. "I pictured rockets shooting up everywhere. As a result of lack of space, we didn't offer the class."

There are many classes the city does not offer because the multi-purpose rooms are not able to handle the equipment involved, Holley said.

A number of dance classes are offered at Lions Park, including tap, ballet, square dance, ballroom, country and western and jazzercise.

The park adjacent to the center has also been used extensively. Animal shows, Girl Scout Olympics and other outdoor community uses are common there.

But the most publicized event at the park had to be last September's jumping frog contest, according to Evans.

All but one of the 47 frogs shipped in to jump that day were dead on arrival.

"That has got to be the most bizarre of anything that has happened here," Evans said. "I can't think of anything to top that."

Because so many people use the city centers, some believe Lions Park will ultimately expand into the adjacent park.

"It would be nice," Evans said. "The buildings we have now are well-utilized. Extra added space would be greatly appreciated and widely used."

Though the funding is not secured, Holley said 6,000 square feet of additions have been mapped out to the south of the existing facility.

Four people staff Lions Park and their duties mostly involve setting up and tearing down equipment and furniture.

"I tell our people they would be great at Bekins (moving company)," Evans laughed.

For information about Lions Park call 980-3145.

Upland center teaches teachers to teach requires that principals "be certified ... in instructional methods and clinical supervision, so this area is very much in the limelight in California," Sanchez said.

"Ninety-five percent of the teachers in this district have been through the training," he said. The district intends for the others to train at the center also.

Some teachers go back for retraining in certain areas, possibly where they have an interest or a need.

But the center is not for Upland alone.

"Over the last couple of years, over 50 districts throughout the state" have sent teachers and administrators to the center, he said.

A state grant funds much of the center's operation. The rest is paid for by the districts sending people to the center.

A professional trainer would charge $800 to $1,500 a day for the kind of services the center provides. "We're able to charge $210 per day," Sanchez said. "The grant offsets the additional cost."

The district itself does not pay anything for training other districts' personnel. And, "we've been fortunate, in the past, that most if not all" of Upland's self-training has cost the district virtually nothing, he said.

Teachers are helped with lesson planning, working theories of reinforcement and motivation into classes, and managing the classroom, among other skills.

Administrators are taught how to help the teachers. That includes observing them and constructively critiquing them.

Some districts want more help than others. Upland's center is to train the entire Poway School District. "Last year we had 120 principals and teachers," Sanchez said. "This year we have another 60 teachers."

For other districts, the center has "trained trainers," teachers who train teachers at their own districts after their visit to the center. □

Meeting to help design park slated

A committee, representing a crosssection of community interest, will be selected to guide the park planning process from meeting participants.

Working with the committee will be Ron Paige of Recreation Systems, Inc., who also assisted with Heritage Park, and the staff representatives of the Community Services Department.

The meeting will be held in the Forum Room of the Lions Park Community Center, 9161 Base Line Road, Rancho Cucamonga.

WHEN ROLES CHANGE

Q. How can a couple adjust to the change in their relationship when a wife goes back to work and no longer has time for all her "wifely" chores?

A. For many men in our society, certain deeds are associated with being loved or cared for. When these "duties" are no longer as predictable performed by their wives, some men regard it as a sign of emotional rejection, which it often is not.

Unfortunately, many men are not aware of these hurt feelings or are embarrassed to express them directly. Instead, their feeling of being deprived or unloved may be expressed as either hostility or withdrawal. Some women, anxious to begin new career challenges, may not be aware of the extra verbal reassurances that their husbands may need to help them accept role changes in the relationship. While women traditionally have been thought of as needing emotional "stroking," men, too, look for signs that they are still special to their spouses.

It is important for both partners to learn to verbalize their needs and feelings more openly, for in that way the couple will be better able to experience the pleasure of change and growth.

Students apply math to mock budgets

Many seventh- and eighth-grade math students at Alta Loma Junior High School are studying the subject's use in real-life situations.

Each Friday, teachers Marylynn Ford and Cherie Stewart become employers. Students are given a mock paycheck based on the number of days they are in attendance at school. Pay is deducted for absences and tardies. The paycheck is then deposited in their mock checking accounts and their pretend-income is used to rent apartments, pay bills and buy food.

Students are buying cars, studying contracts, making interest rate computations and installment payments.

Around January, students will fill out income tax forms based on their incomes, and later they will study the stock market for investments.

Piecing together Rancho's past

By Terri Tirella

Topics ranging from ancient trade routes to camels in Cucamonga were discussed at the second "Know Your Heritage" series presented by Rancho Cucamonga Historic Preservation Commission.

More than 45 people attended the gathering to hear local historians and educators piece together the community's past. Their talks ranged from historical surveys on transportation systems and the cattle industry, to early ranchos, cattle brands, branding irons and "little-known tales."

"The Indians set the major routes we still have to this day, the San Bernardino Freeway and the Devore Pass, and the inland route,"

Underdog band works to get on top

By Terri Tirella

Underdog, a band which plays throughout the West Valley, wants to play music full time.

But its members also want their families to live relatively normal lives. In the music business, they've found, just earning a living can be difficult. "The music business is really unstable. You don't clock in, there are no benefits unless you are a self-contained business with your own pension plan and hospital benefits," Tom Franks, guitarist and one of the founding members of the group, said.

Since its formation, Underdog has had to go through times of artistic transition, personnel change and even poor health.

The group is the continuation of a project the bass player, Bob Copeland, and Franks started in 1976. "We started as a duo, playing middle of the road music, then we were a disco band and played clubs and then Bets came along," Franks said.

"Bets" is Betsy Saulsbury, Franks' wife of eight months. They met when she auditioned as keyboard player and "we sort of grew on each other," she said.

"And have been growing ever since," Tom added.

Like Betsy, most of Underdog's members are alumni of Chaffey College's Music Department. "Joyce Shannon was our mentor and teacher. We owe a lot to her," Tom said.

After the band's disco era about five years ago, they stopped playing publicly and started writing music.

"We were just playing original music when we were named. We were trying with an arty sound and said the hell with disco. The bass player's brother started calling us the 'underdog' and it fit," Betsy said.

But the band returned to dance music because it provides the money essential to a band's development.

"To promote original material, it costs money. At the kind of places we play, for every eight or nine copy dance music (numbers they play) we play an original (song)," Betsy said.

"If we only played original music, we would be limited in where we played," Tom said. "We get our own music in by disguising it at clubs, telling the audience it's by Lawrence Welk or Rosemary Clooney."

Underdog has been playing at Mount Baldy Lodge, military bases, Cucamonga Junior High School, Alta Loma Junior High School and were a part of Rancho Cucamonga's Wine Festival and Los Angeles' Street Scene this year.

"We're trying to hit the schools. We want to get our music heard. I want to play at Alta Loma High School, because I grew up here," Betsy said.

Tom, a long-time Upland resident, has retinitis pigmentosa, which causes night blindness and tunnel vision.

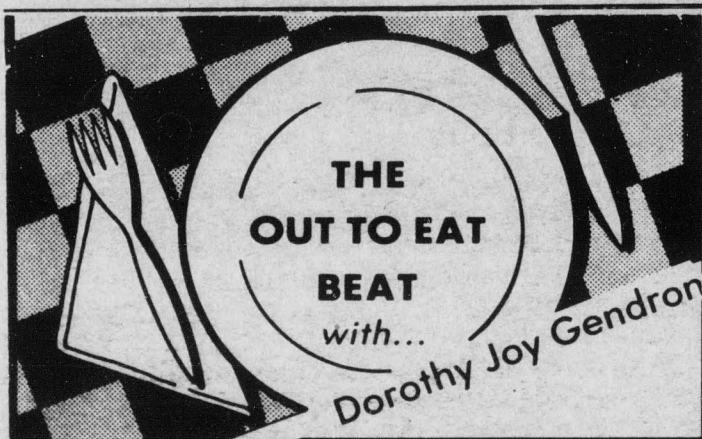

"Dim lights were a real problem for me. When playing in a club, I used a white cane and sometimes would miss the microphone," he said.

The Upland Lions Breakfast Club provided a device, a night vision aid, that amplifies light. "It's a hand-held night scope that must be prescribed for you," he said.

Tom said his ophthalmologist suggested he apply for the aid.

The device cost the Lions Club $2,800. "I don't think they realized how much it changed his life, our lives," Betsy said.

Underdog band is working to get on top

Tom can see now in darkened restaurants or rooms. "Sometimes I would see (an object) that was lighted and I go to reach for it and run into a table or desk, something really big I couldn't see (in the dark). On the romantic side, I saw stars for the first time."

Members of the band now work during the day, so any money the group earns at this point is put back into a fund for rehearsal rooms and equipment. They rehearse five nights a week and play on weekends, at clubs, benefits or "whatever."

The band rehearses at an industrial park in Pomona. "That's the last place bands can rent to play. There are other businesses around but we don't play during their business hours and they don't complain when we practice," Tom said.

"In fact, I think they like it (the music)," Betsy said.

The other musicians, Mike Snyder, keyboards and vocalist; Mario Gonzales, drummer; and Copeland, bass player; are employed as everything from gardeners to music teachers to a technician and an engineer.

Both Tom and Betsy teach at Alta Loma Music Store and say they enjoy it. "Teaching keeps us in constant contact with young people and it's fascinating how (musical) styles come back in," Betsy said.

"It's been our life's blood because you get so much back from your students. You learn a lot about yourself, too," Tom said.

He and Betsy give private lessons as well as working with the store's rock workshops.

"It gives us the chance to help a band that's just forming get past hurdles we stumbled through," Betsy said.

"There's a lot of purposeless junk going on in (new) bands. We teach them to have a purpose at rehearsal and have less talking about cokes and hamburgers, less diddling on instruments and more cleaning up the clutter," Tom said.

Betsy has had classical training and studied piano for several years. "I have a bachelor's degree in art with a music minor."

Tom started playing guitar at age 10, "because my dad was a musician. I've been in bands ever since."

According to Betsy, everyone in the band is shy, "but you wouldn't know it on stage. It's scary at first, but once you're up there, it's not (as frightening)."

"I used to have a lot of stage fright, but as soon as I realized everyone in the audience was like me, they were a bunch of people," she said.

Underdog has a support group too. "Margie Middaugh, Norman Bowie, Peter Malis, Rick Copeland and Bill Thomke are people who make sure we have power, lights, a glass of water, gigs," according to the Franks. "We're like a family."

Underdog is waiting for a "mini-LP" to come out, "A Pedigree." "We chose that name after making puns that had to do with dogs. Our trademark is a giant paw print. We still don't have a release date," Tom said.

The Franks find being married and in the same band a convenience. "The typical story is the husband or wife can't stand having their spouse in a band, but in Underdog, the spouses are supportive. The families work with us, that's why it works out so well," Betsy said.

"We're (he and Betsy) kinda stuck with each other so (if Underdog should disband) we won't need to find a guitarist, keyboard player or singers." □

Sisters find memories in old house

By Jim Marxen

It may be true you can never go home again, but three sisters recently discovered that a visit is within the realm of reason.

Three of the late Nathan Emery's daughters got a dose of nostalgia when they visited their family's former homestead in Rancho Cucamonga last week.

Two of the three sisters had not been inside the old home for nearly 40 years.

Ethel Kreps, Margaret McKee and Jo Deern were invited back by Ralph and Maxine Strane, who now own the wood-frame home along Archibald Avenue near Base Line Road.

"We've corresponded quite a bit with Jo," Ralph Strane said. "So we thought it would be a neat thing to have them all out."

"We were going to have a 75th anniversary for the house but we couldn't get to it, so we decided to do this instead."

McKee was the first infant to live in the two-story house. She was born nearby in 1908, just before Nathan Emery completed the structure.

Eventually there were five girls in the family (two were born prior to McKee.)

Emerys lived in the home until the 1940s.

Tom Tondee

Memories came flooding back when three sisters visited the home of Maxine (left) and Ralph Strane in Rancho Cucamonga. Ethel Kreps (right of Maxine Strane) and her sisters Margaret McKee and Jo Deern grew up in the home but haven't seen it since the 1940s.

Open house to feature art items

Art items created by Chaffey College students will be featured at a pre-Christmas open house and sale in the college art department on Friday and Saturday, Dec. 2 and 3.

The event will be hosted by art department faculty and students. Demonstrations to be held in the ceramics lab will include raku, firing, glazing of ware and wheel throwing. An official kiln opening will be held at 2 p.m. on both days.

Work from these kilns will be sold and the proceeds will benefit the art department. Food and soft drinks will be sold. For information, call Cris Gonzalez, 987-1737, ext. 455.

Sisters recall memories in old house

"We're remembering what it was like then," Kreps said.

Things were certainly different, the sisters remarked. A hallway had been covered up, a fireplace added, doors had been removed and an outdoor stairway had been added.

"My first reaction was the fireplace. My mother always wanted a fireplace," McKee said.

All three agreed the home seemed a lot smaller than when they were children.

"It seemed so big then," Kreps said.

But there were similarities, McKee said. The Stranes own a German shepherd and a bird aviary — so did Nathan Emery.

There were also changes that neither the Stranes nor the sisters could account for. After the Emerys moved, several families lived in the house and each apparently customized the structure.

A carpenter and a farmer, Emery built the home with help from John Klusman, who had a hand in building several well-known Rancho Cucamonga landmarks including the Virginia Dare Winery.

Klusman and Emery also helped build the old stone church at Church Street and Archibald.

Emery always wanted boys but had only daughters — daughters who were given boys' nicknames and raised as boys, McKee said.

"This brings back so many memories," McKee said as she toured the structure.

Although memories may not be evoked in others, the home will be opened for public display next year.

A historic landmark tour is scheduled for May 6 as part of National Historic Preservation Week.

Maxine Strane, coordinator of the tour, said other buildings are the Rains home, the Chaffey-Garcia House and Thomas Vineyards Winery. □

Director enjoys work at community center

By Matt Coker

"I once heard someone say Rancho Cucamonga has a community services department that is better than most and second to none. I thought, 'what a great phrase.'"

Kevin Evans has every reason to be proud of his job. As director of Lions Park Community Center,

Kathy Frey

Lions Park Community Center Director Kevin Evans moved to the area from San Diego two years ago, but he said he is in Rancho Cucamonga to stay.

he has seen a variety of classes and faces go through the five-room building.

He predicts 70,000 visitors will pass through Lions Park by year's end. That proves the department is a success, according to Evans.

A San Diego State University graduate with a degree in recreational science, Evans came to Rancho Cucamonga two years ago, having served the previous four years as the civilian director of the Naval Regional Medical Center in San Diego.

His duties at the medical center included overseeing a wide range of athletic activities, such as baseball, football, soccer, bowling and racquetball.

Though his position is much the same here — relying on support from facility users to keep the operation going — Evans finds his work in Rancho Cucamonga much more rewarding.

"People at the naval center would come up after winning something and say 'where's my trophy?' like it was expected," he said.

"When you see the look on a kid's face here when he runs up to his mom after getting just a participant's ribbon, it's all worth it," he said. "Especially the little kids."

Another aspect of the job that thrills Evans is the fact Rancho Cucamonga is relatively "a baby" as far as the city's age goes.

"It's exciting to think we may be setting recreation policy now which will stand for years," he said.

"Fortunately, we have a community services director, Bill Holley, who is progressive and people like me and Karen (Matchum, director of the crosstown Neighborhood Center) who are aggressive."

Recreation is all in the family when it comes to Evans. His wife, Linda, is a senior citizens recreation worker in Norco. The couple, who met at San Diego State, have a 4-month-old son named Kyle.

"Lions works hand in hand with what I do here anyway," he said. "We provide a service to the community and that follows suit with my work interests."

Becoming president of a service club is not the only surprise Evans has encountered since coming to Rancho Cucamonga.

When a tap and ballet teacher failed to show up for a scheduled class at Lions Park, Evans had to face a roomful of young girls with the news.

Rather than ruin their day, Evans became an instant ballet teacher.

"That should look pretty good on my resume," he said with a laugh. □

Kooiman's one of new American standouts

By Tom Vivian

Kathy Frey

Young Danny Warner gets a helpful hint from Cle Kooiman on how to control the ball.

Cle Kooiman makes a point with his head during a clinic for youngsters last week in Upland.

When professional soccer made its maiden appearance in the United States a decade ago, about the only thing American about the game was its owners.

The sport and its stars were largely European imports. It was safe to assume most of the game's early fans in the U. S. were visiting foreign exchange students.

Recently, however, that trend has begun to change.

Professional soccer has branched into three different circuits — North American Soccer League, American Soccer League, and the newest kid on the block, the Major Indoor Soccer League. With the increased need for quality players, American players have made their presence felt.

Cle Kooiman, a standout soccer player during his prep career at Chaffey High School, and a Far West All-American selection during his two years at San Diego State University, has emerged as one of the new breed of American soccer stars.

Kooiman, 20, who was originally drafted by the Sockers of the NASL, is currently under contract to sports' magnate Jerry Buss' Los Angeles Lakers.

A defender, Kooiman said when he was first approached by the new league, he was not exactly overwhelmed.

"To be honest, I wasn't too impressed at first," he said recently during a soccer clinic at Pioneer Junior High.

Kooiman and roommate Rocky Crisp, the Lakers' goaltender, gave a clinic to coach Pat Hurley's California Youth Soccer Association's Upland Surf last week.

An independent off-shoot of the more prevalent American Youth Soccer Organization, CYSA selects all-stars from the parent league and puts them on more competitive teams, Hurley said.

Kooiman, who played AYSO soccer, said it won't be long before American players are the norm, not the exception, in U. S. soccer.

"I'd say that in about 10 years, our players should really develop," Kooiman said.

Whether or not they develop into players

Kooiman one of soccer's new stars

capable of playing indoor soccer, though, is a different matter.

Indoor soccer is an Americanized version of international soccer, where teams with two less players than regular soccer compete on a smaller playing surface.

The changes have made the game faster paced, and hopefully for Kooiman and his fellow MISL players, more attuned to the American sports fan.

"It's just a great game," the originally skeptical Kooiman said. "Mentally you have to be so much quicker (than in the outdoor game)."

MISL kicked off its second season last week with 12 teams playing a 48-game schedule through April. This will allow most of the game's stars to sign summer contracts with the one of the outdoor leagues, which begin play in April.

Kooiman, who now resides in Huntington Beach, believes that indoor soccer is here to stay. "It's picking up," he said. "If we can pull a .500 season, we should average about 4,500 fans a game."

He said the average salary for indoor players is about $30,000 a year, far below the more established leagues, and light years away from the salaries of most other professional athletes.

Kooiman, however, said despite the lack of big money, he thinks he'll stick with the new game.

"I can't say that I'd never go outdoors, but I'm pretty much committed to it (indoor)," he said.

Smith defends CTC singles championship

Rex Smith of Upland successfully defended his Claremont Tennis Club men's singles title but it was a struggle, while Karen Lucke of Claremont continued her reign in the women's division.

Smith retained his championship with a 7-6, 7-5 win over Mike Bailey of Claremont. Smith rallied from set point six times in the opening match before taking the win. It was more of the same in the second set before Smith finally ended the two-hour bout.

In women's singles, Cathy Manfredi of Alta Loma attempted to end Lucke's two-year hold on the title. However, Lucke displayed excellent concentration with a 6-1, 6-0 victory.

In addition to Smith, Mike Craig of Upland also won in the men's division. Craig defeated Jay Labinger 7-5, 6-1 to win the third.

Other men's winners included Kurt Dietel of Pomona, a 4-6, 7-6, 6-1 winner over Claremont's Kent Stalwick in Flight 2; Scott Higgins of Claremont, a winner over Bruce Wilson of Chino by 6-1, 6-2 in Flight 4; and Jack Thomas of Claremont, a 6-3, 6-1 win over Jesse Salas, also of Claremont.

Alta Loma residents Juanita Bunkers and Linda Swearingen battled for the women's Flight 3 championship, with Bunkers posting a 6-3, 6-3 decision.

Other women's division winners included Mary Miller of Claremont, a 7-6, 6-3 winner in Flight 2 over Sue Mazurek; Teresa Comiskey of Claremont by a 7-5, 7-6 score over Lynne Segall of Upland in Flight 4.

New tests provide standardization

In hopes of more accurately measuring classroom achievement, a new battery of statewide standardized examinations for junior and senior high school students is being planned by the state superintendent of public instruction, Bill Honig.

The new tests will be similar to the 90-year-old New York Regents Exams program and will for the first time allow California high school students to earn honors diplomas upon graduation.

Also, beginning next spring, eighth graders will take the California Assessment Program (CAP) exams for the first time and 10th grade CAP testing will begin this winter.

And, the Department of Education is launching a statewide examination contest that will have high schools with the most improved test scores competing for as much as $250,000 in prize money provided by the Legislature.

All of these programs, according to Honig, are designed to "bolster student achievement and create common standards of excellence for all California students."

The revamping of the state's testing program fulfills a major campaign pledge that Honig made when he was elected state schools chief last year. "I said we have to improve our system of

'No Bozos' catches fancy of public

They're the grocery shoppers who go through the express lane in the supermarket with 12 items instead of 10 — and insist on writing a check.

They're the secretaries who put you on hold when you're calling long distance — and then ask you three times how to spell your name.

They're the drivers who roar up behind you on the freeway, blowing their horns — when you're already doing 65 miles an hour.

They're the bozos of the world. Everybody knows at least one. Everybody is one at times, committing small, usually innocent transgressions that leave their victims exasperated.

But in the past year, a small revolt against bozos has been evident on car bumpers, office doors, telephones and even the purses of grocery shoppers.

Taking what she called a "dumb idea" (but fully aware that "dumb sells"), Newport Beach graphic artist

Kristi Bressert drew a likeness of Bozo the Clown, who gained television fame during the '50s and '60s, and imposed the red international symbol for "no" — a diagonal line inside a circle — over his face.

Artist opens new vistas

Those who wave the banner "art for art's sake" haven't met Patt Shirley.

Tucked away in a little corner of the world, Shirley uses her artisan's hands to mould images. But her images aren't made of clay, they're made of ideas.

A commercial artist by trade, Shirley has taken on several occupations since settling her business in Rancho Cucamonga three years ago.

"I've been an artist all my life," she said. "It was something I wanted to do since I was nine."

"I was always the one stuck drawing the little promo type things."

Shirley refined her talent in art school at Cal State Los Angeles, coming out with a degree in commercial art.

"I said, 'I'll never become a commercial artist' when I was young and naive."

"You think you're going to go out and set the world on fire."

But Shirley placed her degree on ice for eight years when she took an office job in Pomona.

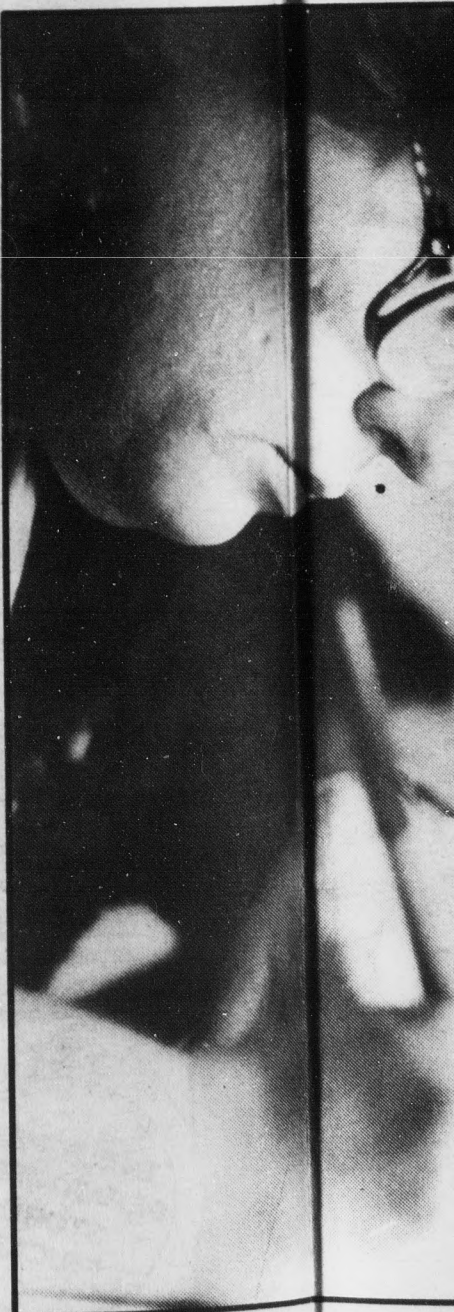

Three years ago, she decided to change her life by utilizing her artistic talents.

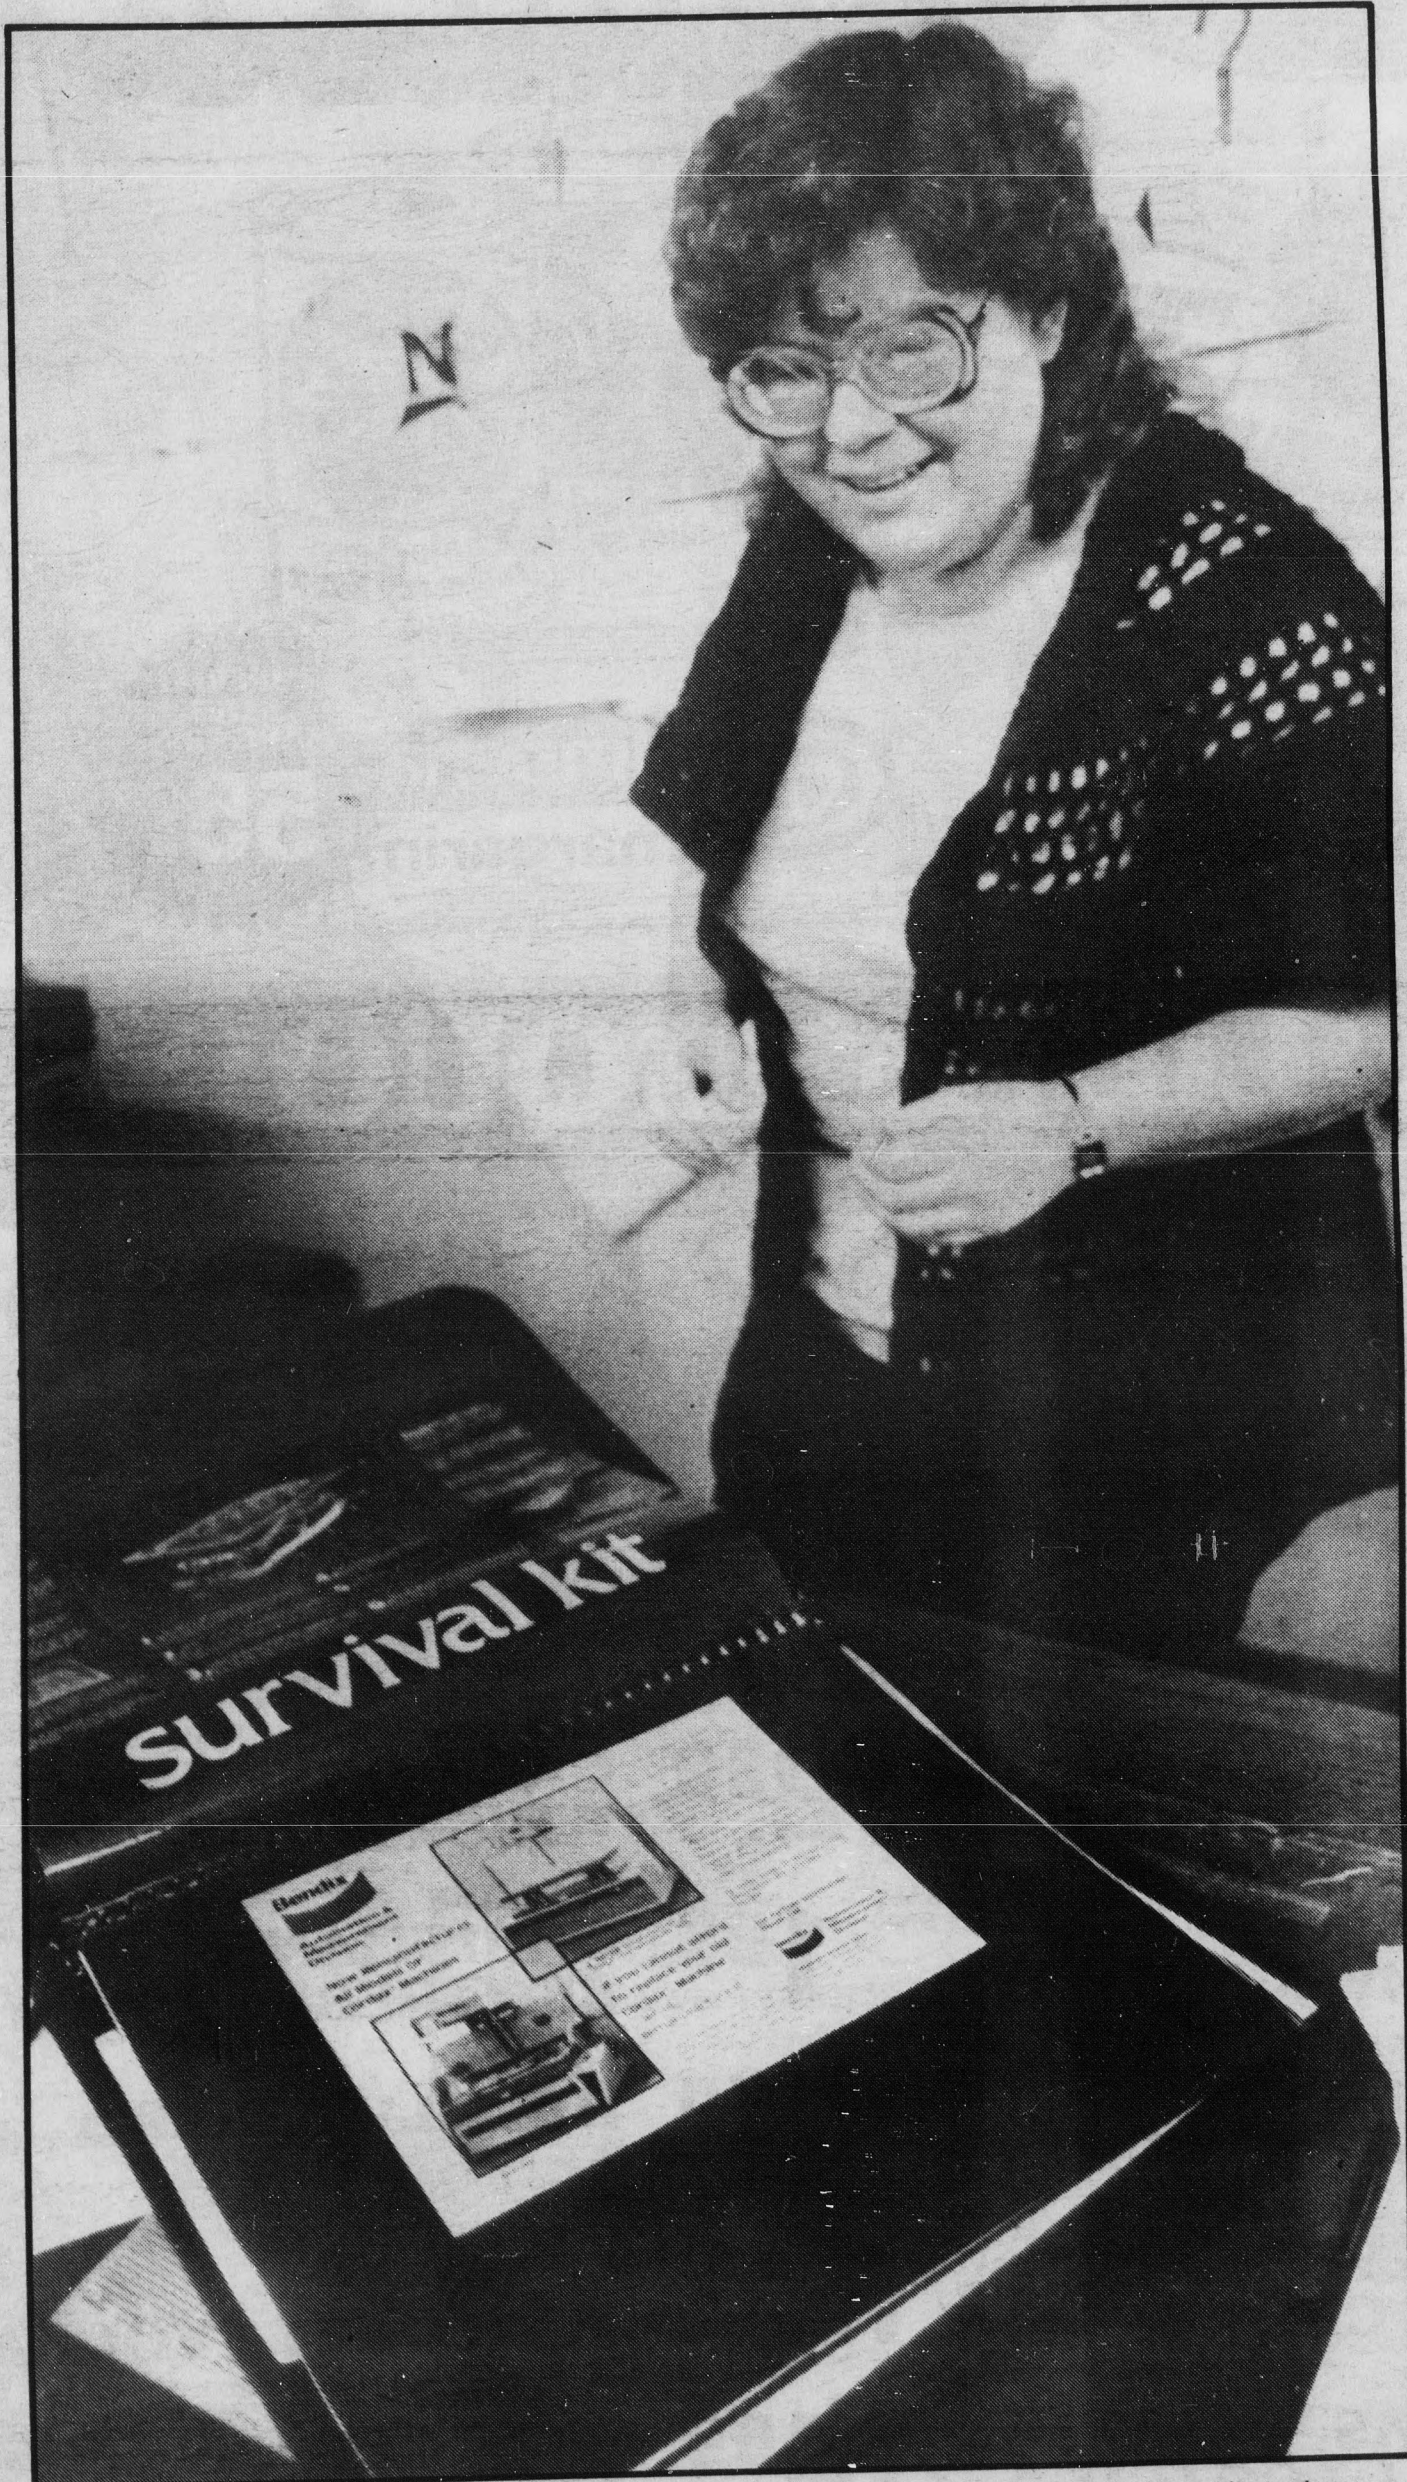

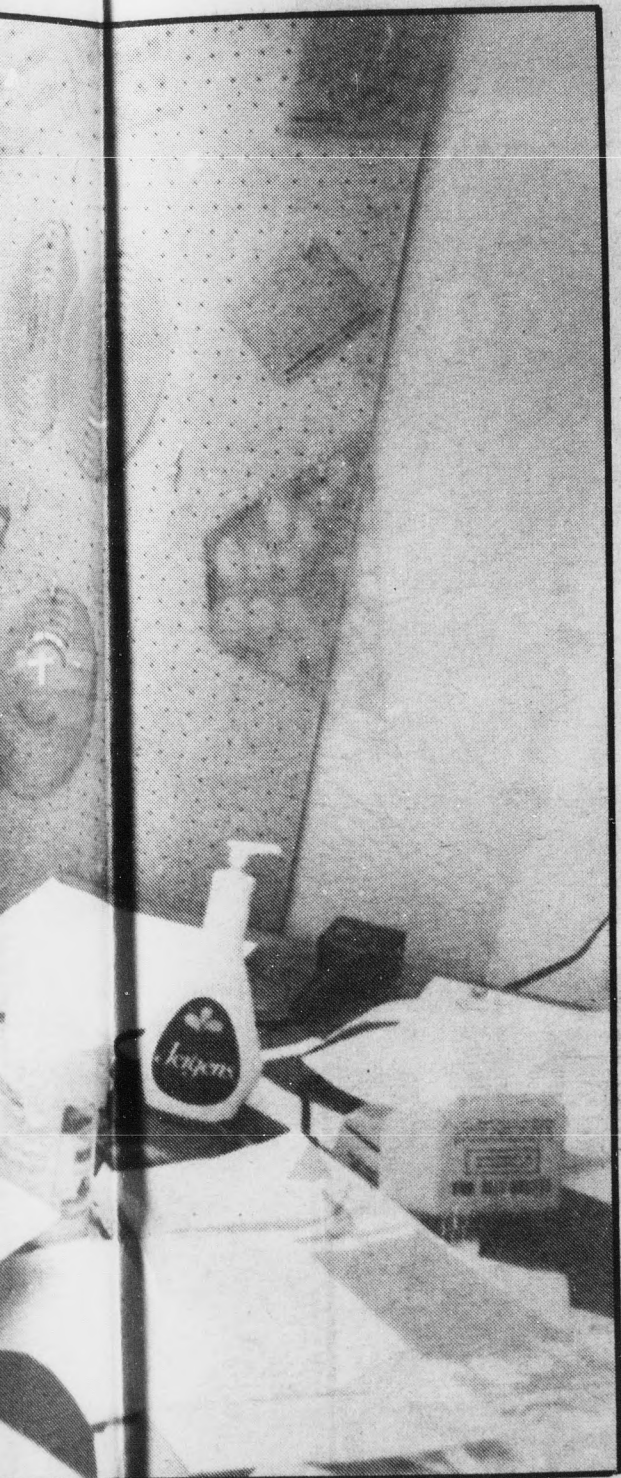

She opened Alcove Office Services in Rancho Cucamonga, fully aware that she was putting a lot on the line.

"There's fear of the unknown," she said. "It's very scary going into your own business."

"You have to give up a guaranteed income and

As an art student, it was never Patt Shirley's intention to go into commercial art but she now embraces the profession. In the two photos at left, she huddles at her desk to complete a project for a customer. Above, she thumbs through her catalogue of work.

Highway 5 (Santa Ana Freeway)," said Dr. Robert Davis of Chaffey College.

He said with the trails and the geography at the time, there were only three ways into the Rancho Cucamonga area: Cajon Pass, the Banning Pass and the coast, "if they crept along."

With the railway came the end of San Bernardino Road, making "booms everywhere, with hotels and whatever" possible, he said. "The Yankee families began moving in."

"If you were lucky you got the Chaffey brothers, if not you got someone like Hellman, only out for the dollar," Davis said.

While most Californians tend to think of the missions as some of the more permanent monuments in state, that's not how the Spaniards viewed them, according to Professor Donald Pflueger, of Cal Poly Pomona. "It was only temporary, to save (Indian's) souls and then be phased out."

According to Pflueger, there was some American penetration in 1799. "Initially they (Americans) wanted sea otter pelts and were interested in whaling." Eventually the cowhide and tallow trade started, with supplies being taken around Cape Horn.

"The ships were floating May Companies. That's why you see so much Early American furniture in Spanish homes. It was a golden era in California, the romantic time of the ranchos," he said.

Although California's government was in turmoil, it was a time of plenty for life on the ranch.

"There were fiestas at the drop of the sombrero, there was a high standard of living on the rancho," Pflueger said.

After statehood, many of the land grant holders had to go to Sacramento to authenticate their property lines.

One of the great tragedies was how ranchos were squeezed down, whittled down by surveyors, according to Pflueger. The action was followed by the demise of the cattle industry in the area.

"Two years of drought wiped out much of the cattle. Some were even driven off cliffs to put them out of their misery," Pflueger said.

After the drought and new fencing laws made by the state legislature, the cattle business never able to regain prominence.

Before the fencing laws were put in effect, cattle were left to roam freely on the land.

"Once a year, to figure out whose cattle were whose, round-ups or rodeos would be held," Michael Lerch, curator in the archaeology department of the San Bernardino County Museum, said.

According to Lerch, ownerless strays would be given to whoever would pay their expense; owners of cattle who did not come to work the round-up had to pay for their cattle which were gathered up.

Bob Schmidt, principal of Jasper Elementary and local historian, said, John Rains was a Confederate-sympathizer, but because of financial troubles was suspected of selling cattle to the Union Army.

Schmidt told stories of U.S. officials bringing camels into the area, spending $30,000 for camels, dromedary equipment and native drivers. U.S. officials hoped to imitate the use of camels by English and French military in Africa.

According to Schmidt, the animals were not too popular. The camels were ill-tempered, terrorized other pack animals and would spit on their soldier-handlers.

The Daily Report and Rancho Cucamonga Times were proud to be able to participate in the 5th Annual Founders Day Parade sponsored by the City of Rancho Cucamonga. The parade which included more than two hundred entries was a tremendous success with large crowds lining the streets to watch the floats, marching units, clowns, horses and more than fifteen bands that traveled along the one mile parade route on Baseline Road.

This year The Daily Report/Rancho Cucamonga Times took 2nd place in the Novelty division with its entry "The Daily Report/Rancho Cucamonga Times Running Strong Since 1910."

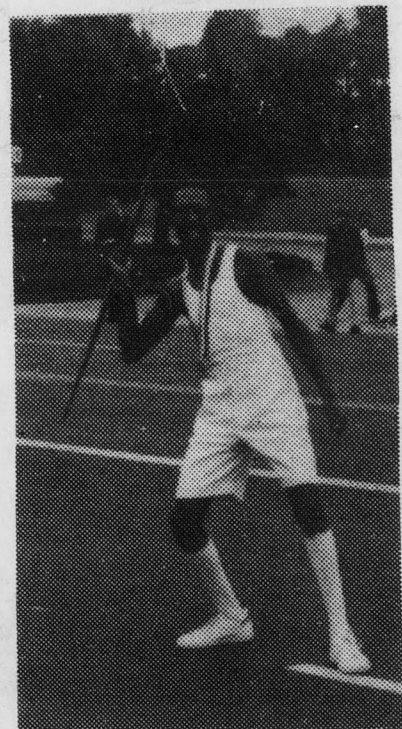

The entry tied together the historical significance of the paper with the parade's official theme "The Olympics: Quest For Excellence".

The fact that the Daily Report/Rancho Cucamonga Times were around in the early 1900's to report on the Olympic games was an intriguing one. We wanted to somehow tie this fact and the parade's theme together.

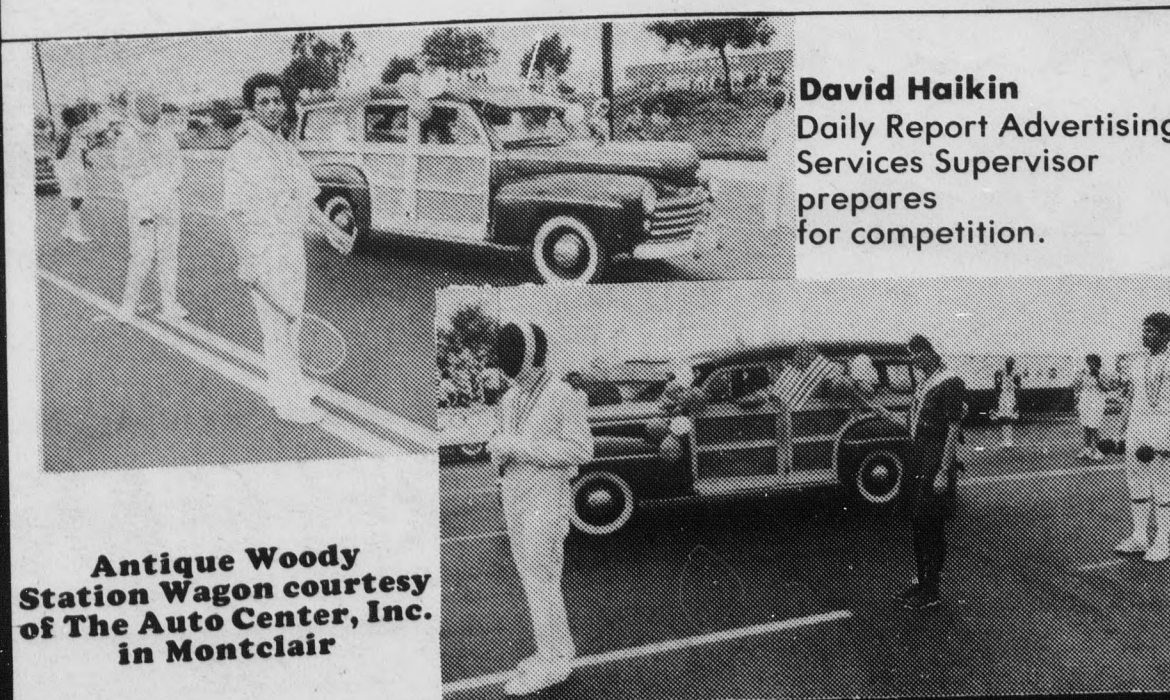

All of our employee participants were dressed in costumes that portrayed various early Olympic events. They marched with an antique car from a later period. Two runners carried the banner preceding an Olympic torch bearer. Despite intermittent rain the parade was a tremendous success and everyone involved with putting the parade on should be commended. Woman hopes to wrap up job woes

By Terri Tirella

Alta Loma resident Nancy Matthews thinks she may have wrapped up her job woes by forming a new business: "Santa's Helper." She'll giftwrap presents in people's homes or for local merchants during the holiday season.

"I have been unemployed for two years and have been trying to find a job. I was getting desperate," Matthews said.

"I had been feeling down. I had applied for all kinds of jobs. I had heard of people doing different kinds of things, (creative, at-home jobs) and thought, why, I can do that," she said.

She started making plans for Sunshine Window Company. "I'm heavy and with all the two-story windows my husband said I would be like Humpty Dumpty, have a great fall and there wouldn't be something to do to put me together again," she laughed.

Matthews said her mother is her cheerleader. "She suggested I wrap packages. Then I started formulating it, (the business) and began it out of my own need."

Matthews worked up an elf-like costume and a supply cart (which looks like Santa's sack). "My husband laughed when I put on my costume, but he wishes me all the luck in the world," she said, adding her husband, Don, was very supportive.

"It's a corny thing, dressing in costume, but people like corny things and the kids love it," she said.

Daughter, Andrea, was equally supportive. "My 12 year-old already wants to get into the act. She wants to be Santa's helper's helper," Matthews said.

"My biggest fear was of failing. I decided to give it a shot and see how things work out," she said.

"When you have been unemployed for two years, having a job, period, would be a nice thing," said the Alta Loma resident.

In the beginning, Matthews said she approached a paper company in Ontario and found her initial cost would be $250 to $300. "I told him (the owner) I was a poor lady, not a store. I really got discouraged," she said.

She bought the minimum in supplies so potential employers could either choose to have her wrap presents with her paper or with supplies provided by them.

Alta Loma resident Nancy Matthews hopes to wrap up employment woes by creating a new service to be offered to the community, Christmas wrapping by Santa's helper in your home.

Matthews said people often buy gifts and paper, but hate to wrap presents or run out of time. "When someone is working eight hours a day and doing shopping on the weekend, they're exhausted. When I was working, if someone would do that (wrap Christmas presents) for me, it would free up time for me to be with my friends and family, to do holiday baking. This service is an option for businessmen who may want to give employees Christmas things," she said.

New tests provide standardization measuring performance. Now we are doing that," he said in a telephone interview.

But there are signs that some school officials in local districts are not pleased with what is being planned. Many superintendents have protested the imposition of additional standardized tests because they claim the exams would take up precious class time that could be better used for instruction.

"We are taking into consideration those concerns and hope to develop programs that will address the needs of all districts," Honig said.

Department of Education officials are most excited about the new high school honors test, which will be called the Golden State Examination.

"We are developing a comprehensive, high-level set of examinations for the state's top students, something to give them added incentive to take challenging courses," said Alex Law, director of planning, evaluation and research for the state Department of Education.

Authority to create the exam comes from a provision in state Senate Bill 813, the education reform legislation that was enacted into law this summer. Assemblywoman Terry Hughes, D-Los Angeles, a product of New York public schools, drafted the provision.

The tests will be modeled after the highly regarded New York Regents exams. In that program, New York high school graduates can earn honors diplomas after passing a dozen or more tests in college-preparatory courses in math, science, English, history and foreign languages.

New York created "regents' courses" with standardized curricula to prepare students for the exams.

Honig said one of the goals of the Golden State Exam will be to "create courses with common content."

"We've agreed on statewide high school graduation requirements but there has been no uniform effort to say what those courses should contain. This program is one way to address that need," he said.

Honig said the exams will also help local school officials identify advanced students and better serve their needs.

Law said the Golden State Exam may be used to grant advanced placement credits to students entering the University of California and that the state universities may agree to give actual college credit to students who successfully complete the regimen.

The tests will not, however, be identical to the New York exams, which are given after the completion of a single specific course such as Algebra I. Instead, California plans to administer the tests following completion of a sequence of courses such as Algebra I and Geometry or the first two years of a foreign language.

Some of the tests, which would be similar to the College Board Achievement Tests that many high school seniors now take, would be given in the 10th grade while others would be administered in the 12th grade, according to Law.

'No Bozos' idea catches fickle fancy of public

And just so the bozos wouldn't miss the point, Bressert added the words, "No Bozos!" underneath. Then she turned the drawing into 4-by-5-inch stickers, selling them for $1 apiece.

Bressert knew she had struck an anti-bozo sentiment out there when one of her first customers, a Newport Beach gift shop, sold 80 of the red, orange, black and blue stickers during one weekend.

Today, some 14 months later, with gross sales of $750,000, there are "No Bozos!" bumper stickers, buttons, sweat shirts, coffee mugs, hats, doormats — and even pillowcases.

"Bozos are basically jerks, except that jerks are jerks all the time and bozos are like the rest of us: well-meaning, kind, lovable people who do dumb things in front of people," she said.

The "No Bozos!" symbol has been embraced by persons from all walks of life.

A Costa Mesa, Calif., policeman phoned Bressert at home after reading about "No Bozos!" in the local paper, and wanted to buy "a bunch of stickers to put on the jail doors," she said.

And recently, Bressert said, clowns working for the Ringling Brothers' circus went into pay negotiations wearing "No Bozos!" hats.

A friend of Bressert came up with the "No Bozos!" idea in 1981, and asked Bressert to design the symbol, but never did anything with it. Bressert bought the idea from him, and found a business partner in another friend who ran a copying service. Together they went to the real Bozo the Clown, Larry Harmon, who gave the duo the right to use his picture.

Harmon is so gung-ho now that he is encouraging Bressert to push the "No Bozos!" stickers as a "national safety symbol" for children and adults.

Big boys tinkered with big toys in 1933

By John H. Nicholson

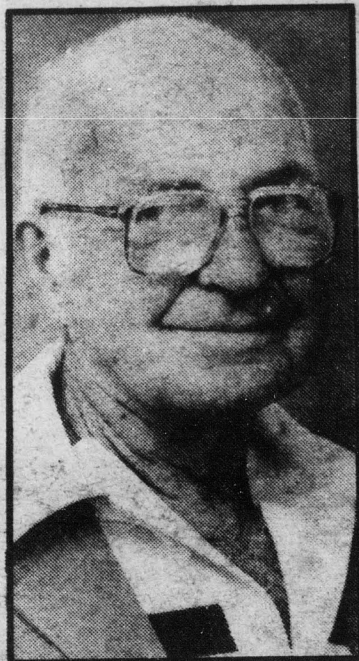

As we entered high school, we felt we had really grown up. Big boys merited bigger toys, and a number went for old autos.

Don Harris, Max Hawkins and Joe Coe scrounged up Model T Fords, which they stripped of all but the very essential parts. In these rolling skeletons, they roamed the valley, our washlands, and our mountains. They even drove to the Colorado River to see Boulder Dam being built. That trip proved a fiasco. While others got to see the project, this apparent riff-raff wasn't allowed within sight of it.

Other Model T problems were common. The gas tank was under the seat and fuel had to flow by gravity to the carburetor. On a stiff climb, the carburetor was often higher than the gas tank, so no gas flowed. The solution was to turn around and back up the hill.

The engine oil system had no pressure pump as cars do today. Oiling was by a sort of splash system, with the crankshaft splattering oil to where it was needed. All fine on level ground, but on a long, hard grade the oil collected in the low end of the oil pan, and the other end of the engine got none. This spelled burned out bearings, and the need to spend awhile on one's back, underneath.

I enjoyed most of my high school classes, specializing in machine shop, auto mechanics, welding, mechanical drawing, math and Spanish. I entered Mrs. Smalley's typing class, but soon found out I was not cut out for "tough typing."

However, I got my typing credit. With about 40 typewriters in the classroom, some were always on the sick list. I brought in a kit of small tools, and spent the period at self-taught repairs. I did learn to type fairly well by the two-finger, hunt-and-peck method.

Our Senior Class of 1933, prepared a class play for staging in the old auditorium on the evening of March 10. I had a part in it, and had to go early for makeup. Arriving at the locked front door, I saw someone inside. Grabbing the door handle, I shook it vigorously to attract attention and to be let in. Giving up, I stopped shaking, but the door didn't. It got worse, and the ground began to shake. What had I started? Then it dawned on me: EARTHQUAKE.

In a moment, our principal, Mr. Ernest Fischer, sprinted from his office into the open. A former track star, he literally flew. Moments later, and far behind, his 5-foot secretary, Corrine Hedged, made it into the clear, her short legs doing their best.

The landscape quieted down and the play went on. Between acts, someone loudly announced that Long Beach was a shambles, and that doctors and nurses were needed. Several folks left. This was a blow to Miss Rosamund Martin, our play director,

Alta Loma woman hopes to wrap up her job woes

"I think Christmas is a super time of the year and it (the spirit) doesn't stop Dec. 26. During the recent strike (of telephone employees), it affected my husband's job. We didn't know whether we would make it or not," Matthews said.

"Without help, or 'Christmas presents' (from friends), we wouldn't have made it through the year," she said.

"People appreciate the homemade touch and that's what I offer. I've already been asked by friends and a crafts co-op shop in Upland, Many Fine Things, to do some wrapping," she said. □ whose fiancée, Dr. Lowell Hill was practicing in Long Beach.

I landed a couple of jobs at the school. One involved getting by physical education class, scheduled just before noon. While the others "suited up" and went out for exercise, I helped trainer Jim Cassidy, in the gym. Mainly, I prepared towels for the sticky gang, soon to head for the showers. After throwing each a towel, I headed for the cafeteria.

There I dumped several kettles of boiled potatoes into a big mixer. Added salt, butter and milk. I turned out a big batch of mashed potatoes. Then, to the faculty chow line to serve as cashier. At other times, Clint Bryant and I sold ice cream cones and bars. These jobs earned us our lunch.

An after-school job involved filling and delivering teacher's orders for class supplies. That earned me wages, and gave me something to do until time to ride home with pop.

I and others did mooring work, and enjoyed fish watching, on many occasions, in 20 to 30 feet of water at Catalina. Years later, my kids and their friends spent hours in it at the new Upland High School pool, scrubbing algae from the underwater surfaces. It still hangs in my workshop.

Due to a good contact made during summers at Newport Beach, I got in some school-year boating. My friend had an old 26-foot fishing boat, and occasionally phoned to suggest a week of cruising. Somehow, I cut school and went. Our ramblings took us to all eight of our offshore islands, and many memorable adventures. My good wife and I are still doing it on our 25-foot boat. □

Three R's joined by bits and bytes

When the buzzer buzzed to signal the beginning of class, Robert Totson, 6, and Robert Cook, 4, promptly scooted their little chairs up to the long table that would serve as their joint desk.

Just as promptly, their teacher took a seat across from them to begin the day's lesson.

"Good morning," Denise Turner said like a million schoolmarm before her. Then she asked the inevitable question: "How many bits in a byte?"

How many bits in a byte? What happened to "How many threes in six?"

How many bits in a byte? What's a byte?

But the boys knew, and just as quickly as they might have answered four plus four, they called out, "Eight!"

Welcome to the Computer Mind Learning Center, where fun with Dick and Jane has given way to fun with Gortex and the Microchips. Here children learn within a few hours that a byte is the basic unit of a digital computer. They also learn how computers work and how to work them — even if they haven't yet learned to read and write.

It is part of Enchanted Gardens Christian School in nearby Inglewood, where she also teaches basic elementary education. Turner might have been satisfied with simply teaching the three R's, she says, if it hadn't been for her husband, Eric.

A computer science enthusiast, he bought two home computers and taught his wife what he'd learned in several computer courses. His enthusiasm rubbed off on her and now those two home computers are used at the center.

During the long days of summer, 30 children, ages 4 through 14, became familiar with them. Now that fall is here, the center is open after school on weekdays and from 10 a.m. to noon on Saturdays.

Children may sign up for four-, eight- or 11-week courses of one-hour sessions per week. Classes are small, with no more than four students in each and the children work at their own pace.

The 10 o'clock class on Saturdays is especially for youngsters like Totson, who has just entered first grade and Cook, a preschooler. Both completed the 11-week summer course and returned to the center Saturday after a two-week break.

The bits and bytes question was part of the review that Turner uses to begin each class. After the boys define such terms as "de-bug" and "software" and learned a new one — "input" — they moved to the computers.

Their task was to input the alphabet so that the ABCs flowed in perfect order from the keyboards in front of them onto video screens. And it couldn't be done, couldn't even be begun, unless the boys remembered the computer commands they'd learned during the summer.

They did. At only 4, Robert C. hasn't yet learned to read, but he had no trouble ordering his Commodore 64 to P-R-I-N-T. Robert T. had a little trouble, leaving out the "l" on his first try. But when his TRS-60 flashed a "Sn Error" onto the screen, he corrected his mistake with a key labeled "Edit."

After several minutes of hunting and pecking on their keyboards, correcting "bugs" when they occurred, both boys successfully completed the alphabet.

Their reward was not a gold star, however, that was pre-computer generation. Their reward was Gortex and the Microchips.

That's a video game fed into the computer by a preprogrammed tape. It goes like this: A letter of the alphabet suddenly appears at the top of the video screen and begins to plummet toward what appears to be a city skyline. The player tries to find that same letter on the keyboard and punch it into the computer before the letter on the screen hits the buildings.

If the player is successful, the letter vanishes from the screen with a delightful explosive sound. If he isn't, the computer scores a point.

Both Robert T. and Robert C. beat the computer, 9-1. They beamed.

"It's a great game," said Turner, "because it not only reinforces the alphabet, but also teaches kids where the letters are on the keyboard."

Auditions slated soon

Chaffey College Theater Arts Department will hold auditions for its 1984 production of "South Pacific" on Thursday, Dec. 1 at 2 and 7 p.m. in the Little Theater.

Those who are interested in a singing role should be prepared to sing at that time. Songs selected for the audition do not have to come from "South Pacific," but should be similar in style. An accompanist will be provided by the college.

The audition is open to the general public. Rehearsals will be held evenings. Performance dates are set for March 2-4 and 8-10.

For information, call 987-1737, 822-4484 or 735-0242, extension 522.

Rains House Christmas planned

By Terri Tirella

An old-fashioned Christmas is planned for the Rains House, Casa de Rancho Cucamonga, with an oil lamp-lighting tour planned, Maxine Strane, chairperson of Rancho Cucamonga Historic Preservation Commission, said.

Casa de Rancho Cucamonga, the restored 1860 home of John Rains, owner of the original Rancho Cucamonga is the oldest fired-brick home in San Bernardino County.

The second annual tour of the Rains' House will be from 5 to 8 p.m. on Dec. 16.

"We've done it mainly for schoolchildren, so they and their families can come. Many have never seen a lamp-lighting house. We have lamps throughout the house and fireplaces lighted," Strane said.

Docents decorate the home. "The ornaments we have collected, we use. We mostly use artifacts from the kitchen, like a copper tea kettle we used last year, surrounded with greenery and candles," she said.

The Rains' House has nine rooms and is the oldest house in the West Valley. A docent, or guide, will be in each room.

"It is a self-guided tour with a constant stream of people. Docents are not taking groups through. Sometimes people like to linger in one of the rooms and ask questions," Strane continued.

The historic home may not be decorated as was the custom. "We have tried to do some research on how the Rains spent Christmas but we got nowhere," Strane said.

She said the Spanish people living on the ranchos combined festivities with tours from rancho to rancho.

"It was almost like Las Posadas (a procession looking for the Christ child). At each rancho, it was traditional to have refreshments and good cheer, then the whole group would go to the next rancho."

Strane said interested volunteers began restoration of the historic landmark in 1972.

"The rancho is not elegant, but we're trying to furnish it as it would have been (at the time of the Rain's habitation)," she said.

She said the house had been changed somewhat, before the commission began restoration. "It is a basic Spanish-style house, square with a central courtyard. Ceilings are 12-feet high in some rooms. Others were lowered during World War II to conserve on heat."

There's no charge for the tour, but donations will be accepted. Proceeds will go to the society's next project, to complete the brick walkway entrance to the house.

Strane said last year's donations helped to build a north cover of the house, which included a patio or courtyard outside the north wall, "a sort of outside museum."

The Rains House is at 7869 Vineyard Ave., at the corner of Hemlock in Rancho Cucamonga. □

Students describe the value of friends

When third-grade teacher Sherry Rhodes asked her class of 21 students at Ninth Street Christian School to write an essay on "Friends," she got, she said, more than she expected.

"They really surprised me," she said. "All of the essays had a lot of thought. The children really impressed me."

Although it was hard, she said, she selected the three best ones — those of Sonny Nigro, Stacey Trudel and Scott Reynolds.

All the essays are printed as they were written. Sonny's essay reads:

When I play with my freind I feel good inside. And when he gets introuble I look after him. "We go places together," and do things together. And when he is hurt I help him up and get help. And when I win at Soccer he never gets mad. And when I get something that he wants he does not get mad. When I am unhappy he cheers me up. "When I have nothing to do," he comes along and does something with me. And we ride bikes together and have fun. Stacey's advised:

A friend is kind, loveing, forgiving, sharing and cheerful. A friend means a lot to someone. And there love grows. To be a friend you must be one. Then you will have more and more friends. Friendship is a good relationship. You can have a friend at any age. Because a friend means alot to you.

Rhodes said although Stacey and Scott's essays were similar, they actually don't sit anywhere close to eachother in class.

Scot's said:

A friend is a special person. They like you and you like them. To have a friend you must be one. You must share, be kind and forgiving. If a friend is hurt help him. Must of all be kind and forgiving.

Graphic artist lives life-long dream

sell yourself."

She "went in cold" and began soliciting customers who needed commercial art.

That's where ideas came in.

"I sit down and look at the previous artwork they've had and I try to find out what type of person they are.

"It's almost like an interview.

"If it's a family business, you don't want to give them slick artwork."

Shirley said she became good at figuring out what kind of image a customer wanted to project.

After awhile, concepts, she said, could be developed in a few hours, she said.

Despite drawing everything from stylistic palm trees to toilet schematics, Shirley discovered customers expected certain things from her.

"For some reason, people come to me and want cutsie animal drawings," she laughed.

Her business branched out until she was running a printing and typesetting service, an answering service, secretarial service, a notary public, an office leasing service and a typing service.

"They just all happened at once," she said. "It's an awful lot for one person to undergo."

The commercial art business has taught her about life.

"It's not at all a cut-throat business," she said. "It's open ... it gives you a good feeling about mankind."

While as a youngster, Shirley never expected to become a commercial artist, but she now finds the work invigorating.

"There are no guarantees in this business but it is something I enjoy.

"I don't think you should be in a business unless it's something you enjoy doing."

Although she spends most of her time doing other things, drawing still gives her satisfaction.

Her artist's desk is shoved into a quiet corner where she can concentrate on her work.

"I'm very happy just sitting down and drawing," she said. "It's very relaxing.

"So much of my time is taken up by administration, I'm lucky if I can get in two or three hours of drawing a day."

But, she added, "it's got to be done."

"I can't do the drawing without paying the bills." □

Local dancers will get the chance to audition for the Dance Theater of Harlem on Nov. 27.

Harlem Dance holding local auditions

Due to the overwhelming response to the Dance theater of Harlem's Arts Exposure Week (Nov. 25 to Dec. 2), the theater has designated Sunday, Nov. 27 for "open call" auditions.

The Theater is an internationally recognized, multi-ethnic ballet company.

Auditioning dancers will be Arthur Mitchell who will be looking for talented California dancers between the ages of 9 and 18. Youngsters from minority communities especially urged to attend.

Arts Exposure Week is pioneer program of the Dance Theater of Harlem which is funded by a grant from the Atlantic Richfield Foundation.

General auditions will be held Nov. 25 to 27 at Polytechnic School Gym, 675 So. Wilson, Pasadena.

Mitchell and his staff will conduct free master classes in ballet, modern and ethnic/jazz dance Nov. 28 to Dec. 2 at the Imperial Gymnasium at Ambassador College, 254 So. Pasadena Ave, Pasadena.

Scholarships to the Theater School in New York will be awarded at the conclusion of auditions.

Dancers who plan to audition must bring a doctor's note and proof of age. For information (213) 486-0940.
